

Friday, December 11, 2015

Holiday gift ideas for foodies

Foodies. They are not just those annoying people that take pictures of everything they eat. They have a unique appreciation for all things food, come in all ages and can actually be some of the easiest people to shop for.

I aspire to be a foodie, and am not convinced that multiple pin boards and subscriptions to multiple cooking magazines makes me one. Mostly because I subscribed to half of them for my 10-year-old who is a hard-core foodie.

And you don't have to subscribe to the lifestyle of chasing food trucks, binge watching Food Network and MasterChef, and never repeating a recipe twice to find the right gift for your friends and loved ones who are total foodies.

But in case you need ideas, I have a list for you.

To top off my list I have to start with this suggestion. Sea Salt.

When the idea came in I jumped up and down, literally. Mostly because I pulled a story out from Bon Appetit back in January about local sea salts across the country, yelling at my husband as to why I didn't know I could drive 30 minutes for it and why hadn't we gone yet.

While Hampton Sea Salt is was not on that list, they absolutely make mine. The company was started by a dad, Peter Pierce, who ditched traditional salts, which are laden with chemicals, for a safe, delicious alternative for his kids.

